

Georgia

Harris Neck National Wildlife Refuge

Facility and Location

The site was acquired in 1942 for use as an Army Airfield. In 1943, Harris Neck became a permanent auxiliary base of Dale Mabry Army Airfield in Tallahassee and assigned to the 111th Fighter Command. The mission of the airfield was to train pilots in dive bombing and gunnery. Some improvement to the site included the construction of three runways and approximately 70 buildings. On December 31, 1944, Harris Neck Field was deactivated and reassigned to the Air Technical Service Command. It is currently a wildlife refuge owned by the Department of the Interior.

Media Sampled and Findings

Surface Water — In 2007, three samples reported no detection.

Appropriate Actions

Not Applicable. All samples were below the EPA and DoD Preliminary Remediation Goal of 15 ppb.